

QUICKSPIN

"The time we spend managing expenses has gone from days to hours."
Elisabeth Andolf, Accountant, Quickspin

The finance department in Sweden received expense reports from Malta by post. If there was no accompanying documentation or receipts, it could take a very long time to chase them up. In addition, the receipts they did receive were often crumpled and illegible.

QuickSpin's biggest challenge with manual expense management was that reports could be submitted in euros, sterling and/or Swedish crowns. Converting the currency first so as to calculate how much to reimburse and then converting it back at the current exchange rate took far too long.

Given how many of us there are today, we simply couldn't have continued with that manual process.

The result

Our employees are now confident that reports will be correct. As a result of integrating with Visma Agda, they can see straight away on their payslips which of their expenses have been reimbursed and they can also easily check that the amounts are correct.

Despite the relatively large number of expense reports we receive, the finance department hardly ever gets any questions about expense management these days. The digital process runs smoothly and expense reporting no longer feels boring or something you want to put off doing.

We now have an approval flow that works, especially as managers are notified when they receive expense reports and they can easily access and approve them using the Companyexpense app or a web browser.

Automatic currency conversion saves our finance people an incredible amount of time. They never need to chase colleagues for information. Also, reporting is correct right from the start, so they no longer have to waste time correcting errors.

With Companyexpense, expense management has gone from taking days to do to now taking just a few hours.
